Headline Daily
"SCAD Hong Kong to open this coming fall"
March 16, 2010

薩凡納學院九月開課
藝廊開幕供入學諮詢

The first private art university at the 'revitalized' North Kowloon Magistracy will start its first school term in September.

Savannah College of Art and Design from the United States will establish its new location in Hong Kong and has started student enrollment. According to the university, programs in graphic design, photography, animation and illustration have received the highest interest from applicants. The university's first gallery was unveiled in Central yesterday, which not only displays students' works, but also runs as an admission information centre. The gallery is at 2/F of 30-32 Wyndham Street, Central, and is open from Monday to Saturday at 10:30 a.m. Admission representatives will station the gallery to answer queries about available courses and admission. The representatives are mainly foreigners; therefore consultation with them might be in English.

Annual Tuition Fee of HK$220,000

According to the university, all courses have been registered with the Education Bureau. An accreditation body from the United States will visit the Hong Kong location and inspect bachelor's and master's degree classes as the final step of the academic accreditation procedure.

SCAD Hong Kong will commence its first school term this upcoming September, offering programs of advertising, animation, graphic design, interactive design, game development, photography and visual effects. The annual tuition fee is around HKD$220,000. Students can apply for non-means tested loan or travelling allowance. Outstanding students may be awarded with scholarships ranging from US$1,500 to full tuition fee. Interested candidates can visit the gallery with their portfolios and consult the representatives. No on-site interviews will be arranged.